Prevention Perspectives

What Can Schools Do to Support Children Affected by the Opioid Crisis?

As the opioid crisis deepens, thousands of children are traumatized by the consequences of addiction in their homes. By integrating trauma-informed approaches, schools can create safe, supportive environments that help these children thrive.

Logic Model Training Helps Kentucky Practitioners Connect the Dots

Logic models connect and communicate the multiple elements that comprise a comprehensive prevention plan, and help to ensure that all key players had a shared understanding of where they were heading. That's why states like Kentucky are requiring the counties they fund to incorporate logic models into their local substance use prevention plans—and why PS@EDC's Jess Goldberg spent two days in January training 80 substance misuse prevention practitioners from across the state on how to do so.
